

Baby Showers

I've known for months that there was going to be this baby shower in Chicago. I didn't R.S.V.P. and kept putting it off because I wanted to get there. I didn't know how I was going to get there. So much going on between Grant and me driving back from the farm in Oklahoma before July, Ame's Birthday...Read More

Birthdays

What a great way to say you love someone by putting together a birthday book of their memorable stories for that year or decade. This book can be of your own doing, or you can invite other people storytelling about that person and have it be a quilt of captured stories from ...Read More

Graduations

About a week ago, the high school that is right near me had graduation night. It brought me back to when Ame graduated from high school. It brought me back to the same year when Sam, my youngest, graduated from eighth grade. We think we remember these events. We don't. It was 2006, and my mother came out for these two graduations, and Paul's father and mother came out too. Mom passed away in 2008 and Dad died in 2010. Memories are all over the place, aren't they? ...Read More

Being A Traveling Personal Historian For You

So last Friday night I was hoping for some sleep onboard the red-eye to Chicago which did not happen. Stopped at Starbucks to sit down and collect me with a cup of tea and egg, went to the restroom to wash my face and brush my teeth, rented my car and drove to my Aunt Mary Jane and Uncle Bob's house where I could relax because this was my destination. It was going to be a full day today and tomorrow in seeing my brother and his family ...Read More
